The musical alphabet includes only 7 letters: A, B, C, D, E, F, G. On the staff, each line or space represents a different letter. The treble clef is also known as the G clef because it indicates that the second line from the bottom will be G. Notice how the clef makes a circle centered on the second line. The remainder of the notes on the staff are named by going up and down the musical alphabet on alternating lines and spaces. A popular technique for memorizing the notes in each clef is to use mnemonic devices for the lines and spaces. For the treble clef lines, the following phrase has been used for many years: The spaces in treble clef actually spell the word FACE: For bass clef, the following phrases work well: These phrases are useful for the initial stages of learning to identify pitches in these clefs. However, to acheive true fluency, the student must practice this skill until all notes can be identified at sight. One excellent training program can be found here: The programs on this site (one of my alma maters!!) are great for working on the fundamentals that we will be mastering in class. Begin with the note-reading drill and practice daily until you can read at least 20 notes in 1 minute (this would be an average speed of 3 sec/note in the stats display). Other suggested forms of practice include: Take some actual music and try reading the letter names (including accidentals as indicated by key signature). If you only have music in one clef, locate a library near you that has music you could check out. For a real good time and tremendous reading practice, check out a recording of the piece(s) as well and try to follow the score while you listen. This is a great way to improve your reading ability! Pick up some flash cards at your local music store. This is not much different from working on the computer, but many of you may prefer this method. Start taking piano lessons - you're going to have to do it anyway and a little head start wouldn't hurt. Page 2 To notate pitches that go higher or lower than the staff permits, ledger lines are used. When writing ledger lines, remember to keep the spacing between them the same as the spacing of the staff lines. Notice also that the notes that sit right on the top or at the bottom of the staff do not require a ledger line! Reading notes on ledger lines tends to be a weakness for students so I recommend that you work particularly hard to learn these well. The Javamusic note-reading drills could be very useful! Page 3 The bass and treble clef are often joined together and form the grand staff (aka great staff). Notice where middle c appears in both staffs. In the same manner that middle C can be notated in either treble or bass clef, other notes as well can be written in either clef. It is important to understand which notes are equivalent in bass and treble clefs. If you have acheived a fair amount of fluency reading in each clef independently, you should now work in Javamusic naming notes in the grand staff. Chelsey Hamm in Western musical notation is designated by the letters A, B, C, D, E, F, and G, which repeat in a loop. Different make reading different easier. Each clef indicates how the lines and spaces of the staff correspond to pitch. In Western musical notation, pitches are designated by the first seven letters of the Latin alphabet: A, B, C, D, E, F, and G. After G these letter names repeat in a loop: A, B, C, D, E, F, G, A, B, C, D, E, F, G, A, B, C, etc. This loop of letter names exists because musicians and music theorists today accept what is called , or the assumption that pitches separated by an should have the same letter name. More information about this concept can be found in the next chapter, The Keyboard and the Grand Staff. This assumption varies with . For example, some ancient Greek music theorists did not accept octave equivalence. These theorists used more than seven letters of the Greek alphabet to name pitches. The Notation of Notes, Clefs, and Ledger Lines chapter introduced four clefs: treble, bass, alto, and tenor. A clef indicates which pitches are assigned to the lines and spaces on a staff. In the next chapter, The Keyboard and the Grand Staff, we will see that having multiple clefs makes reading different easier. The treble clef is typically used for higher voices and instruments, such as a flute, violin, trumpet, or soprano voice. The bass clef is usually utilized for lower voices and instruments, such as a bassoon, cello, trombone, or bass voice. The alto clef is primarily used for the viola, a mid-ranged instrument, while the tenor clef is sometimes employed in cello, bassoon, and trombone music (although the principal clef used for these instruments is the bass clef). Each clef indicates how the lines and spaces of the staff correspond to pitch. Memorizing the patterns for each clef will help you read music written for different voices and instruments. The is one of the most commonly used clefs today. Example 1 shows the letter names used for the lines of a staff when a treble clef is employed. One that may help you remember this order of letter names is “Every Good Bird Does Fly” (E, G, B, D, F). As seen in Example 1, the treble clef wraps around the G line (the second line from the bottom). For this reason, it is sometimes called the “G clef.” Example 1. The letter names for the lines with a treble clef. Example 2 shows the letter names used for the spaces of a staff with a treble clef. Remembering that these letter names spell the word “face” may make identifying these spaces easier. Example 2. The letter names for the spaces with a treble clef. The other most commonly used clef today is the . Example 3 shows the letter names used for the lines of a staff when a bass clef is employed. A mnemonic device for this order of letter names is “Good Bikes Don’t Fall Apart” (G, B, D, F, A). The bass clef is sometimes called the “F clef”; as seen in Example 3, the dot of the bass clef begins on the F line (the second line from the top). Example 3. The letter names for the lines with a bass clef. Example 4 shows the letter names used for the spaces of a staff with a bass clef. The mnemonic device “All Cows Eat Grass” (A, C, E, G) may make identifying these spaces easier. Example 4. The letter names for the spaces with a bass clef. Example 5 shows the letter names used for the lines of the staff with the , which is less commonly used today. The mnemonic device “Fat Alley Cats Eat Garbage” (F, A, C, E, G) may help you remember this order of letter names. As seen in Example 5, the center of the alto clef is indented around the C line (the middle line). For this reason it is sometimes called a “C clef.” Example 5. The letter names for the lines with an alto clef. Example 6 shows the letter names used for the spaces of a staff with an alto clef, which can be remembered with the mnemonic device “Grand Boats Drift Flamboyantly” (G, B, D, F). Example 6. The letter names for the spaces with an alto clef. The , another less commonly used clef, is also sometimes called a “C clef,” but the center of the clef is indented around the second line from the top. Example 7 shows the letter names used for the lines of a staff when a tenor clef is employed, which can be remembered with the mnemonic device “Dodges, Fords, and Chevrolets Everywhere” (D, F, A, C, E): Example 7. The letter names for the lines with a tenor clef. Example 8 shows the letter names used for the spaces of a staff with a tenor clef. The mnemonic device “Elvis’s Guitar Broke Down” (E, G, B, D) may make identifying these spaces easier. Example 8. The letter names for the spaces with a tenor clef. When notes are too high or low to be written on a staff, small lines are drawn to extend the staff. You may recall from the previous chapter that these extra lines are called . Ledger lines can be used to extend a staff with any clef. Example 9 shows ledger lines above a staff with a treble clef: Example 9. Ledger lines extend a staff upwards with a treble clef. Notice that each space and line above the staff gets a letter name with ledger lines, as if the staff were simply continuing upwards. The same is true for ledger lines below a staff, as shown in Example 10: Example 10. Ledger lines extend a staff downwards with a bass clef. Notice that each space and line below the staff gets a letter name with ledger lines, as if the staff were simply continuing downwards.
